Stainless steels are commonly divided into five groups: Martensitic stainless steels Ferritic stainless steels Austenitic stainless steels Duplex (ferritic-austenitic) stainless steels Precipitation-hardening stainless steels. Martensitic stainless steels are essentially alloys of chromium and carbon that possess a martensitic crystal structure in the hardened condition.

In materials science, texture is the distribution of crystallographic orientations of a polycrystalline sample (it is also part of the geological fabric). A sample in which these orientations are fully random is said to have no distinct texture. If the crystallographic orientations are not random, but have some preferred orientation, then the sample has a weak, moderate or strong texture.

A pegmatite is an igneous rock, formed underground, with interlocking crystals usually larger than 2.5 cm in size (1 in). Most pegmatites are found in sheets of rock (dikes and veins) near large masses of igneous rocks called batholiths. The word pegmatite derives from Homeric Greek, ἰϷϵῖν (pegnymi), which means "to bind together", in reference to the intertwined crystals of quartz ...
