Wyoming Wind

Wyoming has the sixth highest wind capacity potential in the country, but it sits at 15th in actual production. With new transmission lines and soon-to-end federal subsidies, now could be the time for Wyoming to take a leap forward in wind investment.

The Window For Wyoming's Wind Industry | Inside Energy

The University of Wyoming, where WIND is located, is in Laramie, Wyoming – a moderately sized town of 30,000 people in the southeast corner of the state (see Figure 1, page 3). The University of Wyoming is a public, land grant institution and is the only four-year institution of higher education in the state.

I. OBJECTIVES AND NEED FOR ASSISTANCE 1. WIND, its Vision

High Wyoming wind energy production often occurs during periods when California renewable energy production is low. Results using field data from Wyoming and production data from California support the results of an earlier report that only used modeled data (Wind Diversity Enhancement of Wyoming/California Wind Energy Projects).

Wind Diversity Enhancement of Wyoming/California Wind

Wyoming's drought in wind development follows a period when wind development was quite robust during the years between 2008 and 2010, so less informed observers could be forgiven for not realizing this more recent change of fortune.
